Profile

Rick's practice involves the defense of clients facing potential liability for chemical discharges or the release of toxic substances.

As chair of the practice, he regularly defends businesses and individuals in litigation involving alleged exposure to lead-based paint, contamination from the discharge of petroleum and industrial chemicals and adverse reactions to prescription medication and other pharmaceuticals.

Rick is the author of State v. Speonk Fuel: The Untold Story Behind the Court of Appeals Decision, published in The New York Environmental Lawyer, Vol. 25 No. 2, pgs. 16-20. He regularly interfaces with toxicologists, neuropsychologists and other specialists to achieve a multi-discipline evaluation of the liability and damage aspects of each individual matter he works on. Rick chairs the Toxic Tort Committee of the New York State Bar Association's Torts, Insurance and Compensation Law Section.
